TWO OF A KIND

Warmneck Tried to Hurry Things in the Laundry.

The man with the flaming eyes, the perspiring forehead and the all-but-up look stormed into the laundry the other afternoon and started right in to work.

"Say, look a here, you," he bawled, pounding with both fists on the counter and endeavoring to impale the young man behind the laundry desk with his eye, "what's the matter with my laundry, hey?"

"You are Mr. Warmneck, aren't you, and you—" the young man behind the desk started to say, not yet realizing that he was only going to be a feeder for the colorful monologue.

"That's who I am," shouted the man with the perspiring forehead and things, "and I want to tell you here and now that I isn't going to be worth your while to try to pump any south breeze into me. What I demand to know, and to know real quick, hub, is this: Where's my laundry, hey?"

"It's got to be done, that's all. There are no ifs, ands or buts about it. Your danged old one-horse outfit promised to have it done by five o'clock this afternoon, and I want it, that's all. No blast furnace boreas conversation is going to take the place of that lingerie gear with me. I want that linen junk, swabbed or unswabbed, and I want it right now. Got that?"

"Your stuff is—"

"O, I've heard that kind of a spiel about 9,999,990 times before, but you are not a-going to zephyr me along with it this time. You're going to try to faze me with the gnome narrative that my stuff's all swabbed and ironed and ready, but that it isn't sorted out yet—that your regular sorter's hat blew off or something while he was out at lunch to-day, and that you had to get a slow man to fill his job, and all like that that-way. But you're not going to ease that one into me this time, Johnny. I'm doing the spotlight part of this sketch myself, and what I want is my laundry, and I don't care a hang whether it's dripping with suds right out of the boiling vat or not. I'm a-going to tote it away with me, if I have to lug part of these works with it. So you want to get active; d'ye hear that?"

"I'm trying to tell you that your stuff was—"

"Was delayed in transit—uh-uh—I've had that one pulled on me a lot of previous times, too. But there's going to be as much a thing as your grunting by with that one this trip. When I handed that outfit of lingerie over to this plant Wednesday evening I told you pinheads that I was going away Friday evening, which is right now, d'ye get that?—right now! You fanned me along with a conignment of superheated atmosphere about having it marked special, and having it all sealed, signed and delivered by five o'clock Friday evening—which I repeat is now! D'ye think I'm going to yamp out of this town in a suit of coal heaver's dungarees? Have you got the idea in your conk that I'm going to glide up and down the street of the town I'm going to be arrayed in a G string and an effulgent grin? D'ye imagine that I'm going to strive to make a three-sheet hit on the thoroughfares of that burg attired in a navajo blanket and a cocoanut-oiled top-knot? D'ye think I'm going to stand for a pinch by walking around in a suit of baby blue pajamas? Say, you, gimme my laundry—I don't care whether it's doused in bluing or not—I want it!"

Just at this stage the proprietor of the laundry emerged from the back room, walked around the counter to where the customer was standing, grabbed him by both lapels of his coat with his slawey hands, put him under the pinpoint focus of his bright hazel eyes, and remarked unto him in a tone that was redolent of meaning and business:

"Say, Butch, stop that gnashing of all the enamel off your teeth and sprinkling the floor with pumice stone. It's too nice weather for that stuff. Cut out that xylophone work and hand-me a little of the woody saxophone music for a change. Nobody's abusing you. Nobody's got you under the gun. Take a rest or two in your soap suds and tinkle out of this Turkistan typhoon that you're in, or the first thing you know you'll be reduced to about two quarts of lubricating oil, and I'll say you right. We promised to finish and deliver your laundry by five o'clock this evening, didn't we? Well, just you make a noise like a hoop, pox, and roll away to your chambers, and you'll probably find your lingerie keeled up on your bunk. The wagons were all out and we rang up a messenger boy and sent it to your address, just two and one-quarter minutes before you cycloned in here with your blase air. My young man has been trying to tell you this for the past 15 minutes, but you've been too busy with your turret batteries to hear him. Now will you be so kind?"

"O, marshmallows—perhaps I have been too uppity," mildly remarked the man who had been in the laundry for only two minutes before, and then he mopped his brow in an apologetic sort of a way and rapped out:

"You've got to learn to pace it back to me just as they hand it out to you. I'm a barber, or you'd better be a knock-out in the laundry business," the proprietor observed to his young man. Then: "Say, where the dickens is his stuff, anyhow?"
